HAS SENATE RIGHT TO EXPEL A SENATOR

UPPER HOUSE'S AUTHORITY DENIED BY SENATOR ELECT

Arthur B. Gould, of Maine, Claims the Senate Has No Jurisdiction To Pass On An Act of Moral Turpitude Committed Fourteen Years Before He Became a Candidate—Case Parellel With That of Senator Humphrey Marshall, of Kentucky, In 1796, Which Is Cited As a Precedent.

The right of the senate to expel a senator for an act committed before his election was challenged Tuesday by Senator Arthur R. Gould, of Maine, Republican, who appeared thru counsel Tuesday before the subcommittee of the senate privileges and elections committee to seek dismissal of the investigation involving his right to a seat.

The subcommittee has been directed by the senate to investigate charges that Senator Gould bribed a former premier of New Brunswick, Canada, to obtain a railroad contract.

Senator Gould's action Tuesday is a reversal of the position he took when the resolution directing an investigation of the charges was pending before the senate. At that time he joined in the request for an investigation.

In his recommendation to the committee, he expressed the conviction, based upon a study of the constitution and the precedents, that the senate has no jurisdiction in the matter, even tho he was willing to have the investigation made.

No action was taken by the subcommittee because the hearing had not been concluded when adjournment was taken to attend the session of the senate. Senator William H. King, of Utah, however, objected to a dismissal of the investigation. He argued that it had been ordered by the senate and that the proper course was for the subcommittee to continue its inquiry and report to the senate. Other members of the committee participated in the discussion, but none of them indicated how he would vote on the proposal to discontinue the investigation.

Frederick W. Hinckley appeared as counsel for Senator Gould. He insisted that the senate in passing upon the qualifications of its members could not go beyond those enumerated in the constitution, and quoted from opinions of Chief Justice John Marshall and Justice Storey of the United States supreme court, to support his contention.

These qualifications are that a senator must be 30 years old, that he must be a citizen of the United States for at least nine years and must reside in the state from which he is elected. Mr. Hinckley said that the constitution was "a creature of the states and the people of the states," and gave no rights to the senate except those granted by the states.

"If in the constitutional convention any delegate had proposed to permit two-thirds of the senators to expel a member from the senate for an act of moral turpitude, determined to be such an act by the senate, long before he became a senator, the convention and no state would have accepted such a provision," Mr. Hinckley contended.

Senator Walter F. George, of Georgia, a member of the subcommittee suggested that it would be necessary to consider the power given by the constitution to the senate to expel a member by a two-thirds vote in connection with the authority given to the senate to pass upon the qualifications of its members.

Mr. Hinckley called attention to the fact that there was no case in the history of the senate or house where either body had expelled a member for having committed an act previous to becoming a member that did not relate to elections.

Senator Gould, he pointed out, was charged with having committed an act of moral turpitude 14 years ago. He said Senator Gould did not admit the act, but declared that if the senate should expel Senator Gould for the alleged act, the senate would do away with an opportunity for reform on the part of Senator Gould.

"Even if all the clergymen in the land should vote that Senator Gould might be a fit member for heaven, under this proceeding it might be held that he was not fit to be a member of the senate, no consideration being given to what Senator Gould might be today," said Mr. Hinckley.

FUNCHAL ONE SPOT UNTOUCHED BY WAR

Funchal, on the island of Madeira, historically is one of the most peaceful spots in the world. It has had uninterrupted peace since its discovery by Zarco in 1418. Three times it has been captured by British fleets, but each time returned to Portugal on conclusion of peace. Men have been free to plant and decorate and build there, unscourged by wars, according to Warren H. Miller's "All Around the Mediterranean." They brought grapes from Crete in 1420 and sugar cane from Sicily in 1452, and have been most industrious with them ever since. The result has been many miles of terraces for vines and great plantations inland for sugar cane. Many generations have devoted their efforts to beautifying these lands without molestation. Continued freedom from wars in Funchal has given the people so much time for work that even the pebbled streets are laid in patterns interlined with geometric designs in white stones.

TEXAS TOWN CLAIMS MANY DISTINCTIONS

Only County Seat Without Jail, Is Boast.

Lefors, Texas.—This quaint town in northeast Texas has so many distinctions they must be enumerated in some kind of sequence. Among these are the following:

Lefors is the smallest county seat in Texas.

Lefors boasts that it is the only county seat without a jail. The jail has been leased to a neighboring town.

Though located on an otherwise treeless plain, the town is hard by a forest of giant cottonwoods.

This fact leads to another distinction. The town has the only saw mill in a territory larger than half a dozen northern or eastern states. There are no other saw mills out on the plains because there is no wood to saw.

The water wells are only nine feet deep in Lefors.

But perhaps the most interesting facts are these: The cottonwood trees bear grapes and virtually all the residents drink grape juice the year round, and although fifty years old this town's cemetery contains only four graves.

Near the town is the Valley of Lefors, formed by a branch of the Red river, which separates Texas from Oklahoma. This valley gives the impression that it is a corner of Japan or an imaginary kingdom in a dream. While the plains may be swept by cold winds, and the frost may creep down from the north, the Valley of Lefors is warm and cozy behind its rock wall shelter.

The towering cottonwoods do not actually bear grapes, but they support the wild grape vines that entwine them and hang down like veils. Here in protected dells grow fruits of all kinds, and the cherry blossoms enhance the Nipponese picture.

From the wild grape vines, a great crop of grapes is harvested every year. The juice of the grape is found in every home hereabouts.

When a man wants a well here he procures a post hole digger, bores down about nine feet and obtains clear, sparkling water.

For a generation Lefors has gone on drinking its grape juice and sawing its wood, and now oil is beginning to touch it with magic of life. The oil boom in the Panhandle is reaching into Gray county, of which Lefors is the exact geographical center.

The town with its dreamy valleys is perking up. The cottonwoods are being transformed into new homes

Find Bones of Mammoth on West Florida Coast

Washington.—The bones of a mammoth washed up on what were then the shores of Florida 500,000 years ago have been brought to the Smithsonian Institution by Dr. J. W. Gidley, as the result of an excavation at Vico, Fla.

The skeleton, though not complete, is the best yet discovered on the west coast of Florida. All the teeth were found, as well as the complete foot structure, the lower jaw, a rib and a shoulder blade and part of the vertebra.

Some of the bones were bren and in the surface of the breakbarnacles, which are now fossilized attached themselves. From the facts Doctor Gidley deduced that the bones had been washed up on the shore of the Gulf of Mexico, though this is now four miles inland from the present coast. They must have been quickly buried in the sand they are very little corroded.

The fossil was discovered by the Venice company, a subsidiary of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, which immediately offered it to the Smithsonian institution as a gift. The company's co-operation enabled Doctor Gidley to rescue as much of the skeleton as possible.

"This discovery," said Doc Gidley, "seems to be a Columbian mammoth, types of which have been found in territories to the north of Idaho."

MAN KILLED BY AUTO, CORPSE UNIDENTIFIED

Driver Is Released After Questioned by Coroner; Victim's Description Radiocast.

Columbus, Jan. 4.—A man, unidentified in the Fisher mortuary at 3028 North High street, was struck and killed while crossing North High street near Stop 13, at 8:30 o'clock last night, by an automobile driven by John Richard Kuhns, 31 Brighton Road.

Ned Masters, 103 Lincoln Road, was riding with Kuhns. They told police they were driving south in High street from Worthington when the victim stepped into the path of their automobile which was running in the street car tracks. They were released after being questioned by Coroner Murphy.

Description of the man was radiocast from Stations WAU and WEAO.

He is about 35 years old, weighed about 165 pounds and was clad in old clothes and overalls. He had black hair and brown eyes. His skull was fractured and his neck broken.

MAY OPERATE ON WOUNDED OFFICER

Canton, Jan. 3.—Police Captain Ben Clarke, who was accidentally shot New Year's eve at the Congress Lake club, was taken to Cleveland, this afternoon, where he will be examined by a group of specialists at Lakeside hospital and possibly operated upon in an attempt to save his life.

Captain Clarke was struck at the base of the neck by a bullet from a small caliber automatic pistol when the weapon dropped from his pocket and exploded when it struck the floor. The bullet passed through the throat and hit the vertebrae, glancing downward.

Congress Lake club officials today launched a movement to have Clarke declared under state compensation on the ground that he was an employe of the club when the accident occurred.

ANCIENT MAPS HOBBY OF NOTED MANITOBAN SAVANT

In His Mammoth Collection Is the First in Which the Discoveries of Columbus Appear.

Winnipeg, Man.—Not to be outdone by St. John's college here, which boasts of a collection of ancient books, many of them dating back to 1500, Dr. Charles N. Bell claims to have the most complete set of ancient maps outside the walls of a historical museum.

Doctor Bell's collection of maps has a continent-wide distinction, one of Labrador having been consulted by authorities in connection with the privy council hearing in London concerning the ownership of that bleak country.

Perhaps the most curious map in the collection is a reproduction of the first map of the world in which America is represented. This map, drafted by the old Spanish cartographer, Juan de la Cosa, in 1500, eight years after Columbus discovered the New world, is a remarkable reproduction. It is in sections, upon which an attempt was made to represent forests, beasts, birds, boats, etc., in order that it might be a compendium of general description as well as a chart of distance and locality.

The oldest original map in the collection is an Ortelius of 1570, representing the earth. The existence of the north and south continents of America was then known, of course, but cartographers were a little vague about the shape of South America. In the old Ortelius map it is shaped and tinted like an orange. Dolphins sport in mid-Atlantic, with here and there a caravel; all the physical features are named in Latin.

Coming down the centuries, there are, to mention only a few: An original map illustrating Capt. John Monck's voyage to the Hudson bay in 1619-20; a "Map or General Carte of the World," drafted in 1669 and dedicated to King Charles II; a "Map of the North Pole and Parts Adjoining," drawn in 1680, dedicated to the Earl of Plymouth; maps of the Great Lakes and Michilimackinac forts, 1744.

Mankind Never Yet Made Centipede Pet

This one, on "The Centipede," from the Tifton Gazette:

"A squirmy centipede am I—a wiggly little beggar; and people sometimes call me by the name of Thousand Legger.

"I like to scare 'em one and all, and this is how I do it: I run across the floor or wall—that's really all there's to it.

"My legs are many, long and fast, and I'm a speedy fellow; folks hate to see me running past—in living room or cellar.

"I'm rather harmless, I suppose, because I seldom bite 'em; and yet as everybody knows, I dearly love to fright 'em.

"They do not like the way I sprawl, for I am long and wormy; and with my moving legs and all—to say the least, I'm squirmy.

"I know they'd like to squash me, too, and end me in a minute; but I'll annoy them till they do, for all the fun that's in it."

NEW WELLAND CANAL WILL FREE ONTARIO

"Cinderella of Lakes" to Take on New Life.

Toronto, Ont.—Lake Ontario, the Cinderella of inland seas, rejoices in the prospect of an early emancipation by the opening of the new Welland canal.

In every port on the great lakes shipping men and others are discussing what will happen in the new era to be inaugurated by the canal, which in some respects rivals Panama. There is much difference of opinion, but whatever happens will be an improvement for the ports located on Lake Ontario.

Here is one of the finest bodies of water in the world, 200 miles long by 40 wide. Surrounded on all sides by rich country and teeming cities, it ought to be alive with commerce. But the ordinary view of Lake Ontario is as lifeless as the picture of the "painted ship upon a painted ocean."

Imprisoned by Falls, Rapids.

Nature played a mean trick on Lake Ontario. It made her the connecting link between two of the most famous rivers in the world—the Niagara and the St. Lawrence—but the falls of Niagara and the rapids of the St.
Lawrence, which millions of people have come from the ends of the earth to see, have isolated and imprisoned Ontario.

Great ocean liners come up the St.
Lawrence to Montreal and stop. Great liners of the inland seas cruise Superior, Huron, Michigan and Erie, but they stop when they approach the mouth of the Niagara river.

It is true both the Niagara and the St. Lawrence have been canalized, but the ships than can be accommodated are small and the trips through the locks tiresome.

The new Welland canal will be revolutionary in its capacity. Instead of a draft of 12 or 14 feet it will provide a draft of 25 feet, which can be deepened to 30 feet. Instead of 27 locks, it will have only 7 locks, and 3 of these will be double locks in flight, enabling boats to ascend and descend.

Instead of 12 to 18 hours now required to get through the canal the passage will be made in 8 hours or less. Ships of 12,000 tons, good-sized ocean liners, will be able to make the Niagara detour with ease.

Ontario Ports Looking Up.

A great milling industry has grown up at Buffalo, N. Y., and Port Colborne, Ont., because all the larger grain ships from the head of the lakes were stopped by Niagara. Now all the ports at the eastern end of Lake Ontario are getting ready to capture or at least share in this trade. The large boats will be able to get down the St. Lawrence as far as Prescott, Ont., and Ogdensburg, N. Y., but as the channel through the Thousand islands is tricky the ports of Kingston, Ont., and Oswego, N. Y., are more generally favored. Kingston, one of the most ancient cities in Canada, is preparing for a great revival.

Montreal also hopes to benefit.
Freight rates for the all-Canadian route will, it is hoped, be lowered (through as to this there is some doubt) and Montreal will be able to compete on more favorable terms with the Atlantic American ports. In any case, Montreal hopes to become a great milling center.

Toronto, in anticipation of the canals, has spent $20,000,000 on a harbor development and even if the achievement of ocean port status is delayed it hopes by more accessible coal and ore supplies to establish on its harbor front large new industries.

By the end of the present season
50 per cent of the new Welland canal undertaking will be completed. By 1930 at the latest it will be ready for traffic.

The cost will be well under $100-000,000.

Army Made 1,000 Flights Over Airways in Year

Washington.—During the last fiscal year army airplanes made approximately 1,000 flights over the eastern division of the model airways from Washington to Dayton. Commercial pilots also took advantage of the facilities offered on the model airways, recognizing the greater safety and ease of air travel over an organized and identified route.

Planes utilizing this route numbered 1,213, of which 959 belonged to the army, 14 to the navy, 14 to the marine corps and 66 to commercial concerns. In addition 166 planes flew over the route but did not stop.

Bering Sea and Straits Getting Much Warmer

Dutch Harbor, Alaska.—Bering sea and straits connecting the Arctic ocean are warming up, icebergs diminishing in size and fish ordinarily fearful of the cold migrating farther north, declare crews of whalers just back from the frigid regions. Seals and walrus have found the water of Bering sea too warm and were scarce except in the Arctic ocean this last season, while whales appeared more numerous in the polar waters than along the Alaskan coast. Herring, smelt and salmon, rarely frequenting Bering straits, have taken the old sealing grounds, say the whalers.

Discovered in a double boiler...

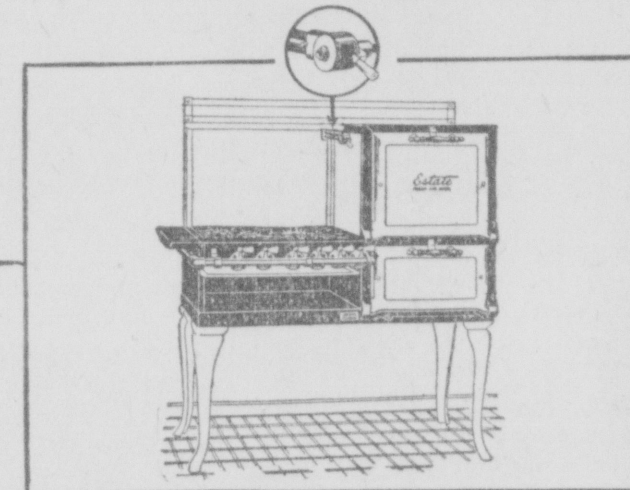

the secret of tempting pies, cakes and cookies

WOULD you ever think of looking in a double boiler to find the secret of baking cakes "like mother used to make"?

Yet it was in the double boiler that the secret was discovered. It's really quite simple. Cereals and other delicate foods, you know, do not scorch when cooked in a double boiler—its construction permits the heat to be distributed evenly throughout its contents.

And now, in the oven of the Estate Gas Range, this same
"double boiler" construction has been adopted. This oven, built on the two-wall, "double boiler" principle, bakes with uniform heat. There are no
"hot spots" to cause scorching, no shifting of pans, no "peeking in" necessary—pies, cakes and cookies come out symmetrical in shape and color.

Let us show you today how,
in the double boiler, the secret of successful baking was found.

LOSE FIGHT FOR VET'S INSURANCE

One Wife Is Declared Divorced and Other Not Legally Wed.

Chicago.—Two wives—one divorced and the other never legally wed—a gray-haired father and an "Enoch Arden" who never returned were the central figures in a drama that grew out of the World war and came to an end in the courtroom of Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson when a jury decided that the aged father was entitled to the $10,000 life insurance of Maj. Mark W. Hanna, Jr., who died as he charged a machine gun nest in France an hour or two before the armistice ended hostilities.

The finding of the jury not only designated the father, Thomas M. Hanna of Iowa, as the rightful heir, but it brought two other matters to a decision by declaring that Mrs. Hallie Schroeder of San Antonio, Tex., the divorced wife, was the legal mate of Hanna at the time of his death, and that Mrs. Corinne Hanna of Kansas City, who married him just before he went to France and drew his insurance until the government stopped it, was never legally married to him, because the previous marriage was still in force.

Involved Veteran's Rights. The drama is one of the strangest that has come out of the war and the first of its kind that has gone to the Federal court for decision. The finding in it was awaited with particular interest, not only because it would set a precedent, but because it involved the rights of the veterans' bureau to pass upon the morals and personal liberties of beneficiaries under a war risk insurance policy.

The reason the government originally stopped the insurance payments to Mrs. Corinne Hanna, after paying her nearly $2,000, was that she was friendly with Joe Wagner, a Kansas City gang leader now serving 15 years in the Iowa penitentiary for bank robbery, and was therefore not entitled to government money. On this point the jury found her not guilty.

Divorced and Married Again.

The facts, as brought out in court, were that Mark W. Hanna married Mrs. Hallie Schroeder in San Antonio in 1915, then separated from her within a month and later entered the army. Mrs. Schroeder lost track of him, she said, and did not know he was dead when she obtained a divorce in 1919. She later married again.

In the meantime Major Hanna, although not divorced, the evidence showed, married again just prior to going overseas. He was then killed on November 11, 1918, and Mrs. Corinne Hanna, the second "wife," became the beneficiary of his $10,000 government insurance. The father of Hanna was named as the next beneficiary if Mrs. Corinne Hanna died. Mrs. Hanna appealed the decision.

Whale, Stranded, Dies on New England Coast

Boston.—A 48-foot whale, the first to come ashore along the New Hampshire coast in more than 20 years, was marooned high and dry recently on the rocks of the northern point of Great Bear's Head. When he was first seen he was alive, but, presumably suffering from a complication of chagrin and exposure, he died.

Just plain hard luck, apparently, beset this monstrous mammal. In the first place, he must have lost his bearings, for he was straying far from the usual haunts of his kind. A whale who can't find his way around in the ocean might just as well quit before any other trouble begins.

This fellow probably was floating, maybe sound asleep, out somewhere on the briny.

The first thing this whale knew he was in the breakers. Being heavy, for his estimated weight is somewhere between 15 and 20 tons, he couldn't get out to sea again.

Out went the tide in the usual manner, but our whale was stranded high up on the harsh rocks. He thrashed his ponderous tail about and strove mightily to regain his accustomed element, but all in vain.

Considerate Man Kills

Self at Undertaker's

Orange, Calif.—Never during his life did E. S. Houghtaling, seventy-eight years of age, wilfully make any trouble for anybody else. He shrank from causing inconvenience. It was his ruling passion.

Houghtaling held to this principle in his last act on earth, it was testified at a coroner's inquest at the Gilgoly undertaking rooms.

Witnesses swore Houghtaling went to the door of the mortuary the other night and rang the bell and that when he heard the rattle of the doorknob in response to his summons he took the sound for a signal to press the trigger of a revolver which he held to his temple. He fell dead into the undertaker's arms.

Two notes were found in his clothing, one addressed to his wife, Mrs. Sarah Houghtaling, the other to the mother of his son's wife, Mrs. Nellie Young of Santa Ana. The letter to his wife was not made public; that to Mrs. Young gave directions for his burial and for notification of relatives, including the son, C. W. Houghtaling, a San Francisco architect.

Ex-Servant Turns Joke

Back on Queen Mary

London.—Queen Mary enjoys a joke equally as well as the king.

Returning from Scotland, the queen has been telling friends of visits with some of the retired royal servants whom she has known for years.

In one cottage the queen asked a grandmother about Victoria Mary, age twenty, and was assured the girl was still at home.

"And is there no word of a young husband?" anxiously inquired the queen.

"I ha' heard o' nane, your majesty," the "granny" replied, and then, as an afterthought, she asked:

"And, your majesty, is there any word o' a wife for the prince of Wales yet?"

"Granny's" neighbors say the queen's reply was a negative shake of her head and a broad smile as she walked away.

TRAGEDY FOLLOWED OWNERS OF GREAT CONDE DIAMOND

Recent Theft Recalls Dramatic History of Jewel Owned by French Royalty.

Paris.—Tragedies and misfortunes have befallen the possessors of the "Grand Conde" diamond for many years. They have given added and impressive strength to the widespread belief that an evil influence lurks in the fascinating rays of the gem. And now the "Grand Conde" diamond has been stolen.

About an inch long and half an inch wide, weighing 50 karats, the diamond has been valued at $2,000,000. While there are several larger stones among the famous diamonds of the world, there is no more perfect example of a pink diamond in existence.

The audacious theft of the stone from the Chateau de Chantilly, in France, is the latest dramatic event in the history of a jewel that has been followed by unparalleled misfortune.

The diamond received its name of the "Grand Conde" because it was first possessed by the prince of Conde, a member of one of the most illustrious branches of the Bourbon family, the royal family of France.

Exile, suicide, fatal accidents, and death at the hands of enemies has been the lot of those who have possessed the gem. The last private owner of the chateau was the duke of Anjou, son of King Louis Philippe, of France. He died in 1892, leaving the chateau with its diamond and other treasures to the French nation.

The diamond, with other rare treasures, was left in the treasure tower of the chateau, which is surrounded by a moat filled with water. A band of thieves, estimated to number ten, crossed the moat with a ladder and rifled the tower.

Officials and police of France are watching anxiously for the diamond to turn up in some jeweler's shop or private collection.

Donates His Life's Work of 20,000 Water Beetles

Washington.—A collection of 20,000 water beetles, representing the fruits of the entomological work of one man's lifetime, has been given to the National museum, under the Smithsonian Institution. John D. Sherman, Jr., Mount Vernon, N. Y., who spent nearly forty years in amassing the collection, is the donor.

Mr. Sherman made the gift in honor of Dr. E. A. Schwarz of the bureau of entomology, Department of Agriculture, to whose inspiration he attributes his first interest in entomology and whose guidance has aided him in making the collection.

The water beetles composing the collection belong to the family dytiscidae and halpidae, representing approximately 400 North American kinds and 200 additional exotic kinds. The collection is fairly complete for the North American species of these beetles. All the specimens are in excellent preservation and well mounted and labeled.

Aside from its completeness, the peculiar merit of the collection lies in the many specimens of each species included. This will permit a study of the variation of species, which is not possible with the ordinary collection containing only three or four specimens of each kind.

The insect collection administered by the Smithsonian now includes some 113,000 different species and 2,500,000 specimens. The institution is daily appealed to for identification of insects from all quarters of the globe.

Building Used by Booth in Lincoln Tragedy Sold

Washington.—The small red brick building where John Wilkes Booth stabled the horse on which he escaped from Washington after he assassinated Abraham Lincoln on the night of April 14, 1865, has been sold by the War department for $4,950. It was purchased at public auction by Jeremiah O'Connor, owner of the adjoining property. The building, in the alley back of Ford's theater, where the martyred President was shot, had been used to store old records of the adjutant general's department, but is considered suitable no longer. For many years after the tragedy it remained unoccupied.

IN MEMORIAM

Editor Union Herald:—The angel of death visited our home on Monday morning and took from our midst our loving father, a kind and good neighbor, Daniel Morris, who after three weeks of suffering passed to his reward.

He was a son of Rezin and Harriet Morris and was born in Pickaway township, Pickaway county, Ohio on December 16, 1859, and departed this life December 27, 1926, aged 67 years and eleven days.

He married Sophie Omo, March the first, 1883, who preceded him in death September 28, 1909. To this union were born two daughters, Florence, wife of John H. Dumm and Josie Iona, wife of Homer Bensonhaver, of Stoutsville. He was again united in marriage, November 18, 1912, to Elizabeth Edwards, Indiana.

He leaves to mourn his departure his widow, two daughters and four grandchildren; Bernice, Kenneth and Gerald Dumm, of Leistville; and Lawrence Bensonhaver, of Stoutsville.

He also leaves an aged mother, five brothers and three sisters. They are Mrs. Rose E. Work, of Denver, Colorado; Mrs. Mary Wilson, of Albany, Ohio; Miss Evaline, at home; Denny Morris, of Kansas City, Missouri; Isaac and Charles Morris, of near Circleville; Arthur Morris, of Duval and Mahlon Morris, of Oakland. His father and one brother preceded him to the spirit world.

Mr. Morris had been in failing health for more than six years and was an intense sufferer for three weeks. He bore his affliction patiently until God called him to his reward. He was baptized by Rev. Mr. Dent, of the Presbyterian church.

The funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at Oakland in the Methodist Episcopal church, conducted by Rev. M. L. Woodard. Interment in the Tarlton cemetery. The pallbearers were Arthur Morris, Charles Morris, Mahlon Morris, Isaac Morris, John Dumm and Homer Bensonhaver.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to extend our thanks to Rev. M. L. Woodard for his consoling words and Mr. Deffenbaugh for his efficient services and the kind friends and neighbors each and everyone who remembered us thru the sickness and after the death of our beloved father and also the quartet for their part in the services.

Mrs. Elizabeth Morris,
Mrs. Florence Dumm,
Mrs. Josie Bensonhaver.

Doctor Preferred Sleep to Treating Snake Bite

Calcutta.—A Parsi doctor, whose alleged negligence resulted in the death of a nine-year-old Hindu boy from the effects of snake bite, was severely censured by a Bombay jury.

Evidence was given to the effect that the boy was bitten by a black cobra and was taken at night to the Haffkine Institute, Parel, where a Parsi doctor said it was not a case of snake bite, despite the protests of the boy's relatives, who said they had seen the cobra near the boy and had killed it. The doctor then asked them why they had not brought the snake. They promised to do so the next day.

The doctor, it is alleged, then asked the party to go to sleep and himself set the example. The relatives, however, being frightened, took the boy to another hospital, where, although he was attended to at once, he died. Medical evidence showed that death was due to poisoning by snake bite.

The jury, returning a verdict according, was unanimously of the opinion that the doctor had been grossly negligent in the discharge of his duty and desired that his conduct should be brought to the notice of the government.

Sisters Wed Brothers; Two Pastors for Service

New York.—Cupid worked overtime at his knot-tying job at six o'clock in Essex Fells, N. J. In St. Peter's church two clergymen simultaneously married two daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Lee Stuart to two sons of Mrs. William Sayre, all of Essex Fells. Everything about the weddings was in duplicate; there were two sets of bridesmaids, two best men, two maids of honor and two tables at the postnuptial supper.

The brides, the Misses Anne Morson and Lee Stuart, are daughters of Francis Lee Stuart, formerly chief engineer of the Erie railroad and a consulting engineer of the Hudson river bridge. The Stuarts are Southerners by descent, but have lived in Essex Fells many years. The Sayre family have been close friends of the Stuarts many years. William Sayre, the grandfather of the bridegrooms, was president of the Lehigh Valley railroad.

Both Had Modern Ideas

By ROSE MEREDITH

(Copyright.)

MRS. HENDERSON looked sternly at her granddaughter. "You can do as you please, Roberta, about having your hair cut off in that absurd way like a boy—but I shall adopt my own attitude of protest against it!"

"Of course," observed Roberta, regretfully, "if Granny takes that attitude, there's just one thing to do—to have it shingled anyway!" Later that morning she went off in her own car, and visited a metropolitan barber, who transformed into a mischievous boy the girl who before had been a dainty, garden-party sort of person.

"Grandmother was right," thought Roberta, as she drove the car in the back way and turned it over to Ben, the garage man. He gave her a furtive glance as she went off toward the house. Then he went to the telephone.

"That you, Cook? The poor little gal's had her head shaved clean as a platter and the madam's got a young preacher to dinner. Head off the poor lamb, that's a good soul." He grinned as he went back to his car cleaning. In all questions between Mrs. Henderson and her orphan granddaughter, now eighteen, the household staff were for Roberta to the last man or woman, though they all admired and respected their employer. So it was Betty, the cook, who waylaid Roberta in a back entry and sent her off to her own room.

"Your grandma do be havin' a young praste to dinner, and she'd be that mad, Miss Roberta, if she saw the mess you've made of your pretty curls—" She shook her head dismally. "Does it look so dreadful, Betty?" asked the culprit.

"Ye look like a hoodlum, miss, if you'll excuse it," said the cook, rushing back to the kitchen.

"I am so glad to know," murmured Roberta. "That counts one on opinion—grandmother will make two nays, and how about the young 'praste'—I cannot imagine a curate approving of this, but I feel so free—" She reached her own room, got into a pair of tweed knickers that grandmother had vaguely approved of for hiking and sports, and stepped from her bedroom window into the boughs of the great oak tree that spread before the house.

Roberta was sitting there, reading in her favorite seat in the tree, when the excited barking of a dog brought her out of the world of fiction to reality.

"How tiresome of Larry to trail me here," she groaned, and leaning over to catch the collie's attention and send him away, Roberta, queen of tree climbers in the past, suddenly lost her balance and grasped a limb and clung to it, swinging breathlessly.

A pair of strong arms reached up and lifted her down to safety. "There, my lad," said a hearty voice. "You just escaped a nasty fall, eh?"

"Yes, thank you, sir," said Roberta in a low, shamed tone. Then she flung up her head and met her grandmother's stern, blank gaze.

"Oh, Mr. Delaine, allow me to present my nephew, Robert Henderson." Roberta's ears burned as she gave an awkward little nod.

Mr. Delaine shook hands, but there was a queer look in his nice gray eyes that Roberta did not understand. "That's odd. I thought you had a granddaughter."

"Robert is a grandnephew," said Mrs. Henderson, removing the relationship a little farther away.

"I see—perhaps you will come over to the rectory some afternoon, Robert, and have some tennis, eh? I am a bachelor and I enjoy playing with young people."

"I'm sure that must be very nice," said Roberta, in her gentlest voice.

"Have you had your dinner, Robert?" Mrs. Henderson asked over her shoulder.

"No, Granny," said the girl.

"Tell Betty to send a tray to your room—I will see you in the morning."

The next morning Mrs. Henderson came down to breakfast to find Roberta fresh and girlish in a blue linen, with a broad band of blue ribbon tied around her soft dark curls, a huge bow in back.

"Good morning, Granny," she said demurely.

"Roberta—last night—your hair? Where is it?" Inquired the distracted old lady as she sat down behind the coffee pot. "Where is your hair, Roberta?"

"On my head, where it belongs. Granny—the barber loaned me a wig to wear just to see if I like the effect, but I do not, and so I am still your granddaughter, aren't I?"

"Yes, darling, and always will be—" "Even if I married the curate?"

"Mr. Delaine? How absurd! Is that the next thing?"

"I hope so! You see, he was in the hairdresser's and must have overheard my conversation about the wig—but he is rather a dear, Granny. May I go and play tennis with him?" Her eyes shone like stars. So this was to be Roberta's fate—a curate's wife. Well, Mrs. Henderson shrugged resignedly. There was plenty of money all around.

"Of course you cannot go to the rectory, but he is coming for tea and tennis this afternoon."

"Who asked him?" Roberta was expectant.

"He asked himself," said Granny with a grimace. "He, too, seems to be a 'Modern.'"

HARTMAN THEATER.

Commencing Thursday night, January 6, at the Hartman theater Columbus, Glenn Hunter, whose fame is linked with "Merton of the Movies," will open an engagement of three nights, January 6, 7 and 8, with a Saturday matinee, appearing in "Young Woodley" which has just closed a triumphant season in New York and completed runs in Philadelphia and Chicago.

This is a play of youth and it has the benefit of youth in its authorship being written by a young man who is still close enough to the life of the characters he has faithfully and exquisitely drawn to write with real understanding and full sympathy. The author is John van Druten, still in his twenties, a lecturer at Aberystwyth university, Wales. Mr. Van Druten saw his play for the first time only a few nights ago, the play the censor in London having raised an objection to its presentation in the British capital.

Mr. Hunter will play the title role that of youth, shy and diffident, wondering at the emotions that come to him. Helen Gahagan will appear in the part of the professor's wife with whom the schoolboy falls in love. A. E. Anson will portray the husband, stern headmaster of the school. Grant Stewart will be seen as the elderly Woodley, father of the boy and the lad's schoolmates will be played by other members of the New York cast.

Mail orders now. Matinee Saturday.

Hunter Rides Deer
Two Miles in Bush
Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.—To ride two miles through the bush on a deer's back is the thrilling experience narrated by Eugene Guzzo, 582 Albert street, West, who has just returned from a hunt at Goulais bay. "We were walking along a trail not far from Goulais bay, Guzzo said, "when we saw a deer lying under a tree. At first we thought it was dead. On going close to it, it did not stir, and then we decided to roll it over. "I got hold of it by the horns. Immediately the deer jumped up, with me on top as though I was riding horseback. The deer gave me a merry ride for two miles."

Elaborate Styles
in Evening Dress

Velvets, Brocades, Jeweled Effects, Filmy Frocks Are All Shown.

Fashions announced for the season include a collection of new and unusually elaborate styles in dress, particularly in evening dress. In the last few years, says a fashion writer in the New York Times, styles have ranged from the simplest to the most ornate. The influence of the angular and classic Egyptian patterns that were at first so startling is still evident, but they have been modernized to give distinction to costumes otherwise commonplace. They give a picturesque note to some of the latest models in gowns, wraps and accessories of dress. Like all innovations to which one finally becomes accustomed, the more striking features have been modified to meet the mode of the day and give character in design and color.

In the Paris collections are presented three distinct types of evening dress in which women of fashion are interested. They are the splendid velvets and brocades; the dazzling jeweled, pailletted and beaded gowns, and the filmy, flowery frocks for debutantes and all the younger set. In the latter gowns the fabrics are most lovely, some of them really deserving to be termed regal—velours, chiffon velvets and the metal brocades—especially the Rodier fabrics. These are varied with moire, faille, crepe and taffeta introduced according to the designs in which their qualities are illustrated. In the latest models the velvet and metal brocades are rich and heavy almost to rigidity; the chiffon velvets caressingly light and the crepes more soft and silky than ever. The Rodier weaves are having a tremendous vogue and are used to express some of the most distinguished among the late styles, establishing still more securely the fame of the creator of these materials. They are splendid in design and opulent in color. The metal cloths, tissues and brocades are shown in many brilliant variants, more ornate than anything in dress goods of other character. These are used for the most formal evening gowns and wraps and are in themselves so elaborate that little trimming is required.

Overelaborated With Jewels. Nevertheless, some of the most striking models brought from Parisian designers are done in lame, both plain and figured, which is overelaborated with jewels, beads and spangles to a degree that suggests the traditional dress of royalty. This idea of making dress ornate has been shown before, but never with such attention to detail nor with such fine degree of artistic sense. This mode is the last word in extravagance of pattern and quality of fabric, suitable only for gowns and wraps built on plain lines and meant to be worn on the most formal occasions. A gown of metal brocade and heavy overtrimming seems somehow to demand a spacious background and a correspondingly ornate setting.

The mode that is more generally accepted in the jeweled gown is in satin or plain velvet, patterned in gilt or silver and with much fine work in paillettes, glass reproductions of jewels, rhinestones and pearls. This heavy sort of embroidery is done most successfully on chiffon velvet or plain satin and some of the handsomest gowns shown this season are elaborated in this manner. In an ultra-smart evening gown from Doeillet, silver embroidery covers the entire surface of black satin in a pattern of separate figures, and the border of burnt orange chiffon outlines the skirt and bolero blouse. In each of these the lifted front line is emphasized and the waistline is higher, almost at the normal point. Doeillet has come to the front this season with an elaborate display of these richly embroidered gowns, some in all-over patterns some in which the beading and embroidery are introduced in sections and bands.

An evening gown of indescribable brilliance is made from a Drecoll design of gold and green lame which is finished about the bottom, the hips and the deep yoke décolletage with bead passementerie and fringe. Che-ruit has designed an evening gown of shimmering green lame in which no trimming is used, but the material is handled in an unusual manner, in shirring, gathered puffs and full-gathered side panels. In this model, as in many from the best French couturiers, three features of the season are presented—the bloused bodice, the uneven hemline and the flare which is accomplished by the addition of floating panels or side draperies. These details are illustrated with equal success in each of several kinds of material, and the most surprising liberties are taken with velvet, lame and brocade. All of the season's fabrics, no matter how pretentious nor how brilliant, are supple and lend themselves easily to draped lines.

Defining Line of Waist.
The spangled gown is of necessity rather simple in outline, though even this is shown this season with a defining line at the waist or hips and a suggestion of being fitted in sections.

Dorothy Sebastian, "Movie" Star, in Crystal and Beaded Net.

Even the fitted "robe" design has a flare; and, usually, the length of silhouette is intersected with a belt trimming, girdle or motif of some sort. The highly polished spangles are used on the late evening models, quite dazzling in effect, even when their brilliance is tempered with colored stones and tinted paillettes.

This type of gown is interpreted by Martial et Armand in silver lame traced in a lacy pattern with small rhinestones, the silhouette varied with three tiers and the low waistline marked with a sash of the embroidered material. Yteb does an evening gown of subtle charm in one of the newest fabrics, cire broche chiffon, embroidered in bright silver. All of these models designed by Paris couturiers and the latest from American dressmakers have a quality of delicacy and fineness in detail in which, for all the brilliance, is nothing garish. Extremes are shown, but with success, as in a costume from Louise Boulanger in which she drapes silver brocade with as much abandon as if she were handling crepe de chine. In like fashion she has created an evening gown of velvet with characteristic bouffant hip treatment and trailing scarf at the back.

In all of the late models the uneven hemline prevails. In some the front of the skirt dips, as in another of Louise Boulanger's models, cut like a circular apron, swinging with the fullness forward, or the reverse scheme, in which the front of the skirt is short, with the back touching the floor or extended into a train. Some very beautiful brocades in color and metal are made with draped paniers, and pointed apron front put together in an intricate and clever fashion.

This particular gown is a delightful illustration of the season's achievement in color, in a pattern of large roses outlined with gold on black satin and having bands of rose-colored satin about the edges. Vionnet, in one of her architectural designs, presents an exaggeration of the undulating hemline, the points of her bias drapery of silver lame dropping in points from the knee to the ankle.

Footwear Is Ornate.

A variety of the most entertaining accessories is offered in all the shops to accompany the season's sumptuous costumes for evening. The new styles in slippers are particularly attractive and are designed to match or harmonize with the gown. Nothing more exquisite, nor more costly, has been shown in footwear than the delicately tinted brocatelles, figured lame with gold and silver and other fine materials of which these evening shoes are made. The styles in trimming are also entirely new and most lovely. Buckles have become important as jeweled ornaments, and are sewn on many of the new slippers in the usual way. In some of the late models, however, the buckle or a medallion is attached at the outer side of the vamp.

AMUSEMENTS

Altho Bebe Daniels' latest comedy, "The Campus Flirt" which comes to the Met Thursday was made in California, it's really a Texas "native son" picture. Three of the company's most prominent members first saw the light of day in the Lone Star State. Dallas contributed three and Houston one.

Dainty Bebe Daniels, Paramount star—has the best part of her career, that of a spoiled, pampered child of wealth who attempts to reign as queen at a democratic American college by using upstage methods—was born in Dallas.

Charlie Paddock in motion pictures for the first time, cast as the "world's fastest human," also lays claim to Dallas as his home town. Then there's James Hall, fresh from the New York stage, still flushed with success in musical comedy. He plays opposite Miss Daniels as the campus hero. Hall calls Dallas the place of his birth.

E Brendel is the third featured member of the cast.

All exteriors for the comedy were made on the University of California's campus under Director Clarence Badger's eagle eye.

Milady's Daytime Chapeau Is Small

Velvet Smartest Millinery Fabric and Burgundy Is Leading Color.

From Paris comes the decision that the brims of fall hats may take what course they will—they may turn up, or down, they may be large, small or medium, or they may vanish into nothingness. Crowns, on the other hand, writes a Paris fashion authority in the Louisville Courier-Journal, follow a definite dictum—they must be high, although their rise in the air may be at any angle from a sharp right angle to a gradual slope back off the forehead. Some few are severe—the majority, however, are soft and crushable, sometimes elaborately draped and sometimes becomingly dented.

Among the sloping crowns, Agnes' receding type exerts a dominating influence, although only the most daring of fashion's exponents will don an unmodified version of this extreme model. In the original this Agnes chapeau shows a highly exaggerated form of the receding silhouette in which the height of the crown is transformed into length from the head size to the back of the head. In some variations the crown leans back, emphasized by tiers or rows of ribbon, resulting in a peak shape too harsh for the average profile. However, this unique and sometimes too trying type may be made wearable by variations and softening modifications. One example is the turban, the crown of which is fairly high and gently, instead of sharply, slanting. Folds and soft draping give the impression of the forehead receding silhouette without the difficult backward line.

Generally brims are permitted to use their initiative this season, there being no set rule for their size or shape. A slight preference, perhaps, is manifested by the Parisienne for the narrow brimmed or entirely brimless hat. The dinner hat, of course, continues large, with a gracefully formal sweep of the wide, soft brim. But most of the hats for daytime wear are small, the tendency being toward the trim and close-fitting beret, so chic this fall. A new brim exploited for sport wear is the rippled type, which droops over the face in soft, regular undulations. Very few brims are plain, the majority being twisted in some novel and decorative manner or slit up the middle to avoid the simplicity of last year's millinery mode. There are comparatively few medium models, but those are smart which turn up in back and down over the face in front. An interesting brim is the turned-up type, which assists the effect of the high crown by its erectness and the fact that it curves smartly upward toward the middle.

Among the brimless hats, besides the wrapped turban, appears the turban with a high head size and full, draped bag; the toque, the beret and the skull cap, which alone defies the high crown and follows the shape of the head.

The choice of colors for autumn hats is limited only by the range of colors employed in fall dresses, since the ensemble theme is quite as significant as heretofore. Black, therefore, leads in hats, inasmuch as it is first in frocks. Chanel and the burgundy reds, the darker shades of green and the new eggplant purple follow in popularity, while the grays and browns appear, as usual, in every shade from light to dark, depending only on the rest of milady's costume.

Velvet, felt and velours stand out among the fabrics in the order named, while black satin is increasingly popular in the more formal models. A new mode of design—a heritage of the daytime frock—is the combination of two fabrics, felt and velvet, satin and velvet, and two kinds of felt being the principal combinations.

All in One Color

Some of the very smartest of chiffon and satin evening frocks have girdles of velvet, a shade or so deeper in value than the frock.

Cornflower Blue a New Color

A new shade of blue just the color of cornflowers is featured in frocks and hats. This color is particularly becoming.

Scientists Find Village of the Ancient Indians

Archaeologists of the Heye foundation, Museum of the American Indian, in New York, have discovered the ruins of the oldest Pueblo Indian civilization yet found in the Southwest, in the so-called lost city, two miles from St. Thomas, Nev. From the extent of the present excavations it seems evident that the city once had a population of perhaps a hundred thousand persons who had reached a state of civilization where they raised corn for food and cultivated and wove cotton garments for raiment. The picture shows the remains of a 56-room house in the lost city.

FEATHERED HERO OF WORLD WAR IS DEAD

Pigeon Which Helped Save Verdun Will Be Stuffed and Placed in Museum.

Paris.—One of the feathered heroes of the great war—a carrier pigeon which helped save Verdun—has just died of old age. The bird had a wound stripe on its leg band and was one of the government's pensioners, having been given a home and a larder by a grateful nation.

Through a barrage of shrapnel the pigeon in 1916 carried a message that kept Friodeterre Hill from being captured. In an order of the day the army cited the pigeon for "having maintained communication with the front line when all human means failed." In its flight through a barrage the pigeon was hit by a shell splinter that carried away its claws.

The pigeon will be mounted and placed in the Verdun war museum.

Life in Fort Mink
"Read me some of those matter on the canned goods, Toofus," requested old Chief Cut Plug of the Flatfoot tribe, who was hanging around the trading post. So Toofus proceeded to read, "Golden Bantam, Pure Horseradish, Tomato Ketchup, Free from Benzozate—"
"I like that last one," said the chief. "But what are you up to, Chief?" asked Toofus.
"Got a new papoose at my teepee and I want a name for it."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

BILL ASKS TWO OHIO VETERANS' HOSPITALS

Washington, Jan. 3.—The new veterans' bureau hospital will be constructed in Ohio at a total cost of $1,700,000, if Congress passes the American Legion Hospitalization bill which was introduced in Congress Monday afternoon by Representative Royal C. Johnson of South Dakota, chairman of the veterans' committee in Congress.

There has long been need of a hospital in northern Ohio for world war veterans, and the Johnson bill proposes that there shall be built a northern Ohio hospital at a cost of $1,000,000. It would be a hospital of 300 beds. The legislation that is proposed does not attempt to fix the location for this hospital.

It does provide, however, that a hospital of 200 beds shall be located at Chillicothe.

The bill carries a total of $16,000,000 for hospital construction, of which Ohio's share will be more than one-tenth.

C. B. MCCLINTOCK

Is Retained To Help Prosecute Rudner.

Canton, Jan. 3.—C. B. McClintock today was named special prosecutor to assist his successor in office, Henry W. Harter Jr., to serve in the trials of Ben Rudner and Louis Mazer cases. Rudner and Mazer were indicted jointly with Patrick McDermott for the murder of Don R. Mellett, Canton publisher. McDermott was convicted of first degree murder. At the same time Prosecutor Harter filed a motion asking that the Rudner case be heard Feb. 2.

Cleveland, Jan. 3.—Max Rudner, father of Ben Rudner, under indictment at Canton in the murder of Don R. Mellett, was to arrive in Cleveland this afternoon for a conference with United States District Attorney A. E. Bernstein, it was announced at the prosecutor's office today.

Reasons for the conference were not given out.

How Jabez Got Revenge

By H. IRVING KING

(Copyright.)

"IT IS, indeed, a long lane that has no turning," thought Jabez Martin grimly, as he rode along the country road, bound for the farmstead of his life-long enemy, Mathew Scott. Mathew and he had been at school together—and had fought, even as little boys. Then they had grown up and had courted the same girl and Mathew had married her. Jabez never married. He devoted the rest of his life to making money—and hating his successful rival. And Mathew had prospered, too; though not to the same extent as Jabez. Mathew had gone in for apple raising and, everybody said, had made a fortune.

The prosperity of Jabez had come from cultivating mortgages and making loans at 10 per cent. Also from an uncanny instinct he possessed with regard to investment in stocks. He had an office in the city and spent his time there, but he had never ceased to lay low for a chance at Mathew. And now he had him. For Mathew, instead of sticking to his apples and peaches, had been lured afire into the thorny and troublous ways of financial speculation. And there was just this difference between Jabez and Mathew—when Mathew bought any, it went up. Secretly, through agents of his own, Jabez had followed on Mathew's trail—and was now prepared to take his financial scalp.

Clarissa Thornton—the girl who had preferred to become Mrs. Scott rather than Mrs. Martin—had been dead a year now. Jabez's slit of a mouth grew firmer and his little eyes glowed with a wicked gleam as he considered the things he would do to Mathew in the near future. Just then he came to where the road forked and stopped, hesitating which fork to take. It was years since he had been along that road.

"Let's see," mused he, "I think it is the right fork that goes by Mathew's. I'll ask that young man I just passed"—and he waited for the young man who was walking behind him to come up.

"Take the road to the left," said the young man; "then the first turn to the right. I'm on my way to Mr. Scott's myself. If you will allow me to jump in I'll pilot you."

Jabez fixed his eyes upon the frank, open face of the youth and a strange, inexplicable feeling came over him. Something seemed to be calling to the old man out of the past, something stirring within him feelings long dormant—dead, as he had supposed, forever. "Jump in," he said.

After a moment's silence he turned to the young man and asked: "Do you know Mr. Scott?"

"Why, yes," replied the youth with a laugh; "rather! He is my father."

"Clarissa's boy," escaped from the old man's lips in murmured tone.

"Clarissa was my mother's name," said the young man. "Did you know her, sir?"

"Yes," replied Jabez, "I knew her—and your father, too," he added grimly. Then suddenly Jabez assumed his best diplomatic manner. He drove very slowly, purposely, and before they reached the Scott place he had turned the young man "inside out," as the saying is.

He had learned the old, old story of a young man and a maiden, very much in love and kept from marrying by a stern parent who was resolved that his son should marry a girl picked out for him and not the choice of his own heart. "You are quite sure that you love this Helen Barstow?" asked Jabez.

"I shall never love another woman as I do her," was the reply. "We shall marry, anyway. In this matter I cannot conform to my father's wishes. But, you see, we will have to wait a long time. I must get a job somewhere, somehow. And I do hate to break with father, awfully. But it must be done."

Jabez, while talking with William, had mellowed to an extent which would have caused his business acquaintances in the city, had they seen and heard him, to have concluded that the old man had lost his mind. But he hadn't; he had only changed it.

"Now, William," said he when at last they arrived at the Scott place, "you show me into the parlor and go and tell your father I am waiting for him there. And don't worry about Helen. Your father and I are old—acquaintances. Perhaps I can persuade him."

Jabez and Mathew were closeted together for two hours. When the conference was over a treaty had been signed which appeared to be satisfactory to both. That night Mathew said to his son: "William, if you really are set upon marrying that Barstow girl—why, I suppose I'll have to give my consent."

"Hurrah!" cried William—and then, reflectively, "Did Mr. Martin say anything about it?"

"Why, yes," replied Mathew. "I believe that, in the course of our business talk, he did allude to some thing of the kind."

"Sexless" Animal Found

Animalecules, known as Daphnias, which live in ponds and ditches and are distantly related to the shrimp and lobster, are found to be practically "sexless," the females laying and hatching eggs without the aid of males over a long period of time. Males are occasionally born, but the ordinary phenomena of sex do not appear at all.

IN MEMORIAM

Editor—Union-Herald:—Someone has said that life is but a day at most, a little gleam of time between two eternities. That the life of a person is but a heroic poem such are the feelings that are in our hearts as we meet here today to honor this life and the memory of one whose life is so well known among his acquaintances the recording angel has entered another name on his changeless roll and we bow in reverence and drop a tear of sympathy for on Monday evening, December 27, 1926, a pale shadow spread its mantle over the frail form and the departing spirit of Lewis Alva Campbell slipped its mooring and sailed away.

He was born near South Perry, Hocking county, Ohio, March 30, 1870, age 56 years, nine months and three days. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Campbell. Both his parents preceded him to the spirit world. He was united in marriage to Leafa Annetta Riegel, August 2, 1903. One son Dwight R., was born to this union who died in infancy. His loving wife and companion departed this life February 1, 1919. He was then united in marriage to Nellie Florence Swank December 23, 1919. To this union were born two sons and one daughter, Paul Edward, Helen Mae and Floyd Padrick, who with a grief-stricken widow remains to mourn their loss.

He also leave one sister, Mrs. Lilly Good, and one-half brother, Padrick Campbell, of Westerville, Ohio.

The deceased was a member of the Cedar Hill Evangelical church for a number of years and was also a member of the Knights of Pythias lodge of Stoutsville, Ohio.

The chronological story of a human is soon told but the memory of that life sacrifices cheerfully made for those knitted by ties of blood live on thru the changing years and ever bring a solemn joy to the bereft ones.

Father Campbell was of a kind disposition always willing to lend a helping hand to anybody when in need not free to censure always taking the broad view of life thus having a charitable view of the weakness to which we are all inclined and while the last few years of his life were years of sickness and suffering he bore these with patience and fortitude, often praying God to relieve him from his suffering, and to be with Him, who doeth all things well. He nevertheless walked steadily, bravely toward the end, confident of his steps even until last one was taken and thus closed the volume of his life when the record of the whole human family is finally written he whom we see today so tenderly laid away will not be accorded a blank page but to him will be accorded the greatest of all things language can convey—Love.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to express our sincere thanks to the neighbors and friends, we especially thank the undertaker, E. M. Crites, the pastor, A. J. Freeman, Huffer brothers and all who assisted us in way during the sickness and after the death of our dear husband and father.

Mrs. Nellie Campbell And Children.

INSTALLATION.

The Pythian Sisters will hold their installation Thursday evening at 7 o'clock. All the members are urged to be present.

NOTICE TO DITCH CONTRACTORS.

Sealed proposals for furnishing all materials along the ditch bank and constructing the improvement of the Greenbrier Ditch, petitioned for by J. King Wilson, and located in Derby Township, Pickaway County, Ohio, will be received until 1:30 P. M., Central Standard time.

MONDAY, JANUARY 17, 1927

at the office of the County Auditor of Pickaway County, Ohio, and then publicly opened.

This improvement to consist of the straightening deepening and widening of the present Greenbrier Ditch and in the manner as prescribed by the specifications.

From Sta. 0+00 to Sta. minus 12+88, and from Sta. 0+00 to Sta. 18+50 this ditch is of the underground drain type and is laid at present with 12 in. and 15 in. pipe. On such ditch shall be removed, cleaned or replaced with new tile between the above stations, which in the judgment of the Engineer, requires removing, cleaning or replacing with new tile.

From Sta. 18+50 to Sta. 150+00 this ditch is of the open ditch type and it will be required to excavate same to the exact grade and side slopes as staked out by the Engineer, and deposited in such a manner as prescribed in the specifications. Some repairs will also be required on the concrete headwall at Sta. 18+50.

Separate bids will be taken on the tile portion of this ditch, and on the open portion of this ditch, and bidders may therefore bid on either one or both such sections of the ditch.

Said bids shall be in writing on a form to be furnished by the County Surveyor and be accompanied with a deposit of money, or a certified check on some bank or a bill of current exchange in an amount of three per cent of the bid as a guaranty, that if the bid is accepted, the bidder will sign the contract for the performance of the work and furnishing of the material bid upon, and will furnish such bond to the county for the performance of the contract signed, as may be required by law.

Plans, Profiles and Specifications are on file at the office of the County Surveyor of Pickaway County, Ohio.

The Board of County Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners of said County.

H. G. CRINER,
County Surveyor, Pickaway County.
